

St Margaret's COLLEGE

with a view to the future

Dr Kylie Armstrong – College Director

Dr Kylie Armstrong has over 20 years of experience in the education and health sectors, including teaching, research, executive planning, policy creation and leadership development at both state and federal level.

Dr Armstrong has undertaken masters study and completed doctoral programs around work associated with preventative health, as well as teaching qualifications. Dr Armstrong has also taught in academic settings in the School of Medicine and School of Physiotherapy and Exercise Science including supervising honours and masters students during her tenure as Senior Research Fellow. She has presented at leading conferences in the field, has published in peer-reviewed journals and has been involved in attracting competitive grants and external consultancies. Most recently, Dr Armstrong has been working in the challenging field of Indigenous health, providing high level policy formation, strategic planning and corporate governance to multiple national bodies.

Dr Armstrong has developed extensive networks in the Australian corporate and business sectors, including senior government contacts. She also has on-going partnerships with local, national and international academic institutions.

Married with three children, Dr Armstrong has one son studying economics and commerce at university, while her other two children are still at school, including a daughter who is attending St Margaret's.

Dr Armstrong is excited by the innovative concept of St Margaret's College and is particularly looking forward to working together with the young college women on the Student Success Program, and ensuring their tertiary journey prepares them well for their best futures.
